FACTS ABOUT OPALS.

Where the Finest Specimens of the Gem Are Obtained.

e Mines of Honduras and Hungary—The Famous Ring of the Roman Senator Nonius—Popular Superstitions At-tached to the Charming Stone.

The records regarding old opal mines are lost, but it is supposed that the ancients de-rived their supply from Arabia and Syria, says a writer in the San Francisco Chronicle. The famous Hungarian mines were not discovered until late in the fifteenth century, and were, of course, unknown to century, and were, of course, unknown to the Romans. The principal mines from whence opals are obtained to-day are situated in Hungary and Honduras. The American opal lacks the hardness of the Hungarian gem, but it is fully as brilliant and withstands atmospheric inroads upon the colors quite as well. The magnificent characteristic of the gem, which gives it value and renown, is the brilliant combination of colored reflections which it displays, and when the stone is held in the sunlight, the Latin philosopher was correct in statthe Latin philosopher was correct in stat-ing that it was made up of the glories of the most precious stones.

The gem is found not only in porcelai The gem is found not only in porcelain earth but also in fissures and seams of old igneous rocks. Quartz, when flawed in the interior, sometimes exhibits a remarkable iridescence, and resembles the opal especially when viewed at a distance. Such specimens are called iris. The elegant iris ornaments worn by the Empress Josephine were of remarkable brilliancy and the wonder and envy of the Imperial court. She also possessed the finest opal of modern times, which was only displayed when arrayed in all the grandeur of full Imperial splendor. It was indeed a fitting ornament for so beautiful a woman. Its flashing rays of light were so powerful and vivid as to give the appearance of living flames of fire, and from that it received its title "Lincendir de Troie"—the burning of Troy. The tate of the gem is unknown, but with the history of the fair owner the most casual reader is of the fair owner the most casual reader is

Empress Eugenie had a superstitious dread, amounting to positive aversion, for the beautiful opal, and the stone was a stranger at the brilliant court. It is possible that Eugenie may have been in-fluenced in her hatred of the gem from Josephine's fondness for the same, and attributed to the mysterious workings of the flery mineral some subtle, malign influence that conspired to bring about her downfall. But the fact remains inscribed upon the pages of history that, although the opal was rigorously banished from Ver-sailles and the Tuilleries, Eugenie fled from sailles and the Tuilleries, Eugenie fled from Paris under cover of darkness, cowering with terror in the dusty depths of a shabby vehicle, as the roar of a raging populace reached her ears.

The famous opal of history was that which was worn in a ring by the Roman Senator Nonius in the days of the Triumvirate. Its size accurrely exceeded that of a rate. Its size scarcely exceeded that of a hazel nut, yet its beauty and brilliancy rendered it a marvel among the dilettanti of Rome, and it was valued at nearly $1.000,000. Marc Antony, bearing in mind the sacrifice of Cleopatra's incomparable pearl, and still enslaved by the Egyptian Queen's investible characteristics. and still enslaved by the Egyptian Queen's irresistible charms, made overtures for the opal, intending to present it to the dusky beauty; but Nonius refused to part with his cherished gem, and sought safety in flight. The extreme beauty and charm may be estimated when it is known that to a Roman banishment was worse than death. History makes no further mention of this wonderful opal. It has disappeared from wonderful oper it has disappeared to the the world's collection of gems, and its glories have probably yielded to the destructive effects of time.

The fire opal is found in its greatest perfection in the porphyritic rocks at Zimapan, Mexico. It is generally of a hyacinth red color, and gleams forth with flashes of brilliant carmine, with yellow and green scintillations. The Mexican production surpasses all other varieties in the intensity and gorgeousness of its hues, but it will not bear exposure, and the sensitive surface soon loses its flashing beauties. They bring exorbitant prices in Mexico when sold to the unwary, who learn all too soon, upon re-turning to the haunts of civilization, that turning to the haunts of civilization, that they had paid nearly fifty per cent. too much for the gems. The Spanish historians, in their marvelous stories of the wonders seen in Mexico at the time of the conquest, describe the image of the mystic idol Quet-zalcoatl (god of the air), on the great pyra-mid of Cholula, as wearing a miter waving with plumes of fire, and which was sup-

The colors displayed by the opal embrace all the tints in the solar spectrum. The shades of green, blue, yellow and red are vivid and olear. The purchase of opals in the rough, natural state is hazardous as a speculation, for frequently after having left the hands of the lapidary the stone has be-come a transparent, hucless stone. The Central American opal in numerous in-stances has been known to fade and gradustances has been known to fade and gradually lose all brilliancy.

The grandest specimen of the gemever discovered was unearthed in the mines of Hungary in 1770, and purchased by the Austrian Government. Its weight was seventeen ounces, and it was three and three-quarter inches in length. It rests in the Imperial cabinet at Vienna, and is valued at $300,000. The opal is not sold by weight, but its value depends upon its size and the intensity of its fire and combination of colors. An opal half an inch in diameter colors. An opal half an inch in diameter may have a value of five dollars, and an-

may have a value of five dollars, and another, no larger, but possessing brilliancy of hues, may sell readily for $5,000 or more.

One of the prettiest combinations in the jeweler's art is the opal surrounded with damonds. The foolish prejudice and dark superstitions are rapidly dying out, and the value of the gem, which had reached lowwater mark during its banishment, has increased fully thirty per cent. During the last two years the trade and demand in the gem have increased at a rapid pace, and ten last two years the trade and demand in the gem have increased at a rapid pace, and ten times as many opals are imported now as during the preceding decade.

Fifteen years ago the popularity of the stone began to wane, until scarcely one was to be seen at a fashonable gathering. Many ladies who were above being swayed by superstitious fancies admitted they held indefinable prejudices against the fiery, gleaming combination. It is the jewel of October, and all born in that month may safely stifie all fears they may entertain regarding it, and wear the opal with impunity.

GRIGGS EXPERIENCE.

of his life occurred some years ago, when he was advised to go to the Adirondacks for his health. He procured a guide and a buck-board wagon, and away they went for the woods. Though Grigg had never meta buck-board before, he always thought they had no springs; but he estimated that this par-ticular one had about two thousand and three springs to the minute. He never suffered so in all his life. The guide was chewing tobacco, and, though Grigg knew it was an awful thing to wish, he prayed that he might swallow it and die. By and by Grigg became resigned. He began to lose his sky-ward aspirations and to enjoy life. Pretty soon they stopped and the guide invited him to get down, but Grigg and the plank were so attached by this time that he couldn't bear to leave it.

The guide investigated, and began to use painful language.

He explained that Grigg's spine had been hammered clean through the board and stuck out the other side. Grigg saldshe'd seen a stream of sawdust following the wagon for some little ways, but couldn't account for it before. The guide was very disagreeable. He said he'd had a whole board when he left town, and wanted it back. Grigg pointed out that he had th hole bored now, and claimed indemnity for the wear and tear on his back bone. They compromised, and camped where they were; but the guide said he guessed he'd set up.

In the morning, they returned to town.
They agreed that Grigg had better keep away from the wagon. He wanted to ride the horse, but the guide said he'd had that animal a great many years and felt attached to him. He couldn't bear to leave him to die by the roadside, far, far from home. Grigg never went to the Adiron-dacks again. He said he'd been so bored the first day that he didn't think it augured

GRASMERE CHURCH-YARD.

Where Green, Coleridge, Clough and Other Celebrities Lie Buried. pause, but we return to that tomb of Hartley Coleridge's. Above his dust the oak leaves Wordsworth tells the sexton to measure out the ground for his own and his wife's grave, and then a third plot for the dead Hartley measured out opened its grassy door to receive the aged bard. We note the yew trees eight in number, brought by Wor direction from Loughrigg Tarn and planted with his own hand there. We listen to the murmur of the bees in the sycamores; we eves fall on the name of Clough, for to knew him well, and in a moment there rises before us the possible form of one who sang of that first Arthur, of one who ofttimes meditated here; his memorable music omes to mind; we leave the poet's corner,

The Cubmen of Cuba.

The Cuban cochero or cabman is such a marvelous contrast to the American hackman that his deserts are far beyond the power of pen. But he is also such an unmitigated nonenity that he deserves ignominy. You pay but forty cents in Spanish paper, equivalent to only sixteen cents in gold, for a "journey," or ride in his little victoria from one point within the city to any other. He seldom overcharges a customer. Whether so or not, the cochero, when unemployed, sleeps on his box, his little nag meanwhile sleeping in the shafta, and when awake he is good-natured, greasy and silent. He does as he is bid and for the rest relies upon your honor, Providence The Cabmen of Cuba and silent. He does as he is bid and for the rest relies upon your honor, Providence and the police. He seldom rises to the tre-mendous height of proprietorship, but rents his shabby outfit of a company which has a high-sounding name and is perennially short of fodder. The occhero has no home, eats at the cheap cafe, sleeps in the stable-loft or upon his own carriage-box and makes love anywhere.

A tylear Case of Excelsion.

Sixteen years after her burial the coffin of a Winnipeg woman was opened and the body found petrified. She had her mouth open, however, which goes to show that she was game even when it came to turning into stone.

The Trials, Tribulations and Sufferings of a Thin Man.

I think Grigg was the thinnest man I ever saw, writes Florence Pratt in the Yankee Blade. Had he entered the living skeleton field he would have wiped out all competition. He used to speak of it sometimes in a calm, despairing way.

Grigg said he was so thin that the bones poked through his skin and cost him a small poked through his skin and cost him a small fortune in court-plaster to keep them from punching holes in his clothes.

He used to weep when he told us that he hated to lean up against a wall while talking to any one, because his bones were sure to peck the mortar all out before he got through, and it used to hurt his feelings when his friends asked him what was the mortar with him.

We often wonder why Grigg never smiled.

We often wonder why Grigg never smiled, but he said the smile was always getting looped up on his cheek bones and he was too old to begin life as an elephant.

He remarked that the saddest experience

The grave of Green, the painter, with its beautiful Wordsworthian epitaph, bids us wreathed upon the cross, the crown of thorns and the legend: "By Thy Cross and Passion," are eloquent of a life of constant effort and sorrow that awe us as we gaze. There are figures that haunt this holy spot. A sexton stands, rule and spade in hand. It is January 7, 1849, and with how are Words. is January 7, 1849, and with him are Wordsworth and Hartley Coleridge's brothers. And Wordsworth is much in thought of Dora's and William's funeral two years ago in 1847. "When I lifted up my eyes from my daughter's grave he (Hartley) was standing there." Then, turning to the sexton, he said: "Keep the ground for us; we are old people, it can not be for long." It was not long; a year and a few months passed, and in April, 1850, the ground that day hear the undersong of the River Rotha close beneath the low church wall. Our

These grassy heaps that he amicably close are the graves of the family of Sympson, and on the low stone we read: "Here lie the remains of the Rev. Jos. We leave the church-yard, expecting to find by the south-west wall the year seat of stone whereon west wall the very seat of stone whereon that old vicar and his friends are represented in the sixth book of the "Excursion" as holding their high discourse.—Cornhill Magazine.

QUESTION OF BUT A MINUTE.

How Young Wilson and Fireman Mysegades Lost Their Lives.

The Coroner's Jury met Saturday afternoon at 4 o'clock to inquire into the death of Harry Wilson and J. H. Mysegades, and took the testimony of engineer Thatcher and conductor Clark of train No. 9, when they adjourned over till this morning at 9 o'clock. The testimony given before them is as follows: Jack Thatcher, the engineer of No. 9, testified as foliows: I left Truckee on No. 9's time at 8:15, and we were due at Verdi at 10:25 A. M., but were a few minutes late in Verdi on account of unloading freight at Essex, but arrived at Verdi at 10:2816 or 10:29. We dropped a car out at Verdi; that took about two minutes. I left Verdi between 10:31 and 10:32. I looked at my watch when I left the west switch, and it was 10:31. It was about 10:32 when I passed the station. My watch and the clock on the engine were exactly alike. I don't know what time my conductor had, but I believe that he compared his time with my clock after leaving Verdi. We broke in two this side of the Verdi bridge, and it was there that the conductor compared his watch with my clock. We had to stop and couple up the train after we broke in two. The train was coupled by Ike Cross or the conductor. This took, from the time we stopped until we got started, three or four minutes. This was about two miles west of where the collision took place. It was between 10:41 and 10:42 after we got the train started after we broke in two. I looked at the time about as we started. We were running ten miles an hour when I looked at my watch, and increasing. We increased the speed of the train until we were running about twenty-one or twentytwo miles an hour. We were going of the murder of the three brothers of down grade. The schedule for running trains is thirteen miles an hour round curves and fifteen miles an hour 371. Cannot tell how fast we were ning trains is thirteen miles an hour on a straight track. I had no special orders to run faster than the schedule time. It took five minutes to run from where we broke in two to the place where the collision occurred. West-bound trains have the right to the track unless they are twenty-five minutes late at meeting points, but all minutes late at meeting points, but all put ner in the same class are obliged to allow five minutes for variation of watches. We were six minutes late twas then, but after 78 quit blowing steam we looked and it was 10:48. I can't tell how long it the bar to loose her steam, but it

> No. 10. I received a severe cut on my head that dazed me for a time. We expected to meet No. 10 at the switch, and we expected to get there before the five minutes had half expired. simply a mangled lot of flesh, he was torn into pieces and seemed to be burned badly. When I noticed him first he was right under our feet. His The engine of No. 10 was about 200 yards west of the west switch. When I looked at my watch after coupling the train after we broke in two, it would take about five minutes to run to Laughton's. We were running on the time allowed for variation of watches when we collided. There is no rule of the company that allows us to run on the five minutes allowed for was in the stack of No. 78; he couldn't help but have been dead, from the smoke, heat and the position he was in, the smoke coming from the engine variation. I told the conductor that we could make it all right, or we could cut off and flag down, and he said, "Let us go on, we can make it." I did not think that I could make it said, "Let us go on, we can make it."

I did not think that I could make it without infringing on No. 9's time, but I thought I could get to the whistling post and be heard or seen by that time. Our instructions are to flag when we can't make a meeting point on time. If my train had sent a man ahead to flag us in there would not have been any collision. I compared my watch with the clock at Truckee before leaving there, and am quite positive my time was correct. The clock at Truckee is considered reliable. I blew two remarkably long whistles at the whistling post and one after passing it. The whistling post is about half a mile west of the west switch. My object for blowing them was to notify No. 10 that we were coming.

E. E. Clark, being sworn, testified as follows: Am a S. P. conductor. On the 4th of April I was running as the content of the collection of the co My object for blowing them was to notify No. 10 that we were coming.

E. E. Clark, being sworn, testified as follows: Am a S. P. conductor. On the 4th of April I was running a freight train between Wadsworth and Truckee. I was running as freight train between Wadsworth and Truckee. I was running as freight train between Wadsworth and Truckee. I was running train No. 9, bound east on that day. Left Truckee at 8:15 F. M. on that day, on time; reached Verdi about 10:31 A. M. Did not register at Verdi; asked operator relative to his time and he said you can't depend on that clock; it's wrong. I told him about a couple of cars I set out from the train, gave him the bills and pulled out. Did not stop train at the station; threw him the bills, gave signal and pulled out. I looked at my watch and it was 10:31. Engineer also looked at his. I climbed on the first car. Then went on the engine and caught first car. I then went on the engine; rode on the engine till we reached Laughton's, and was on it when we met. We had an accident on the hill this side of the bridge, where a pin pulled out and train stopped. We coupled up as soon as possible; did not take time, but could not have been over a minute. Don't know who coupled the train positively; one of the boys did it. Did not time the coupling, but it couldn't have been over two minutes. One of the brakemen asked me if we should go on and I told him certainly. Thatcher and I spoke just before we got to Laughton's and we talked about his clock. I looked at it and looked at my watch. The latter read 10:42. The watch and clock were very nearly together, not over thirty seconds difference. As we went around the curve above Laughton's house I said to Thatcher if you can't make it we will cut off. He said there was no need of it, we will get there. I don't know that I answered him. I was satisfied with his answer. We had something over two minutes before we were due at the switch; were due there at 10:45. We were something over a mile from the switch. We were running at about 25 miles an hour at that time. We were satisfied that we could reach it in the two minutes. There would have been a very utes. There would have been a very little difference in the time, not more little difference in the time, not more than fifteen or twenty seconds, perhaps covered by the variation of the watches. Trains are allowed five minutes at meeting points for variation. We counted on reaching Laughton's on time, not considering variations. It is supposed that four or five minutes may be taken up in getting to a switch, but we were on time at the whistling post. At this point we were not in post. At this point we were not in sight of the crew of No. 10. There is a very sharp curve there and the train could not be seen. The rules are laid down in the time card, that the first train at a siding is supposed to side-track, but then there are customs not laid down in the rules.

The up train holds the the main line to Verdi. The down-hill train generally side-tracks at Laughton's; from Verdi to Bocca the up-hill train has the main line at Verdi. The up-hill train side-tracks at Verdi. I am certain that we were in sight of the whistling-rest at Laughton's within the 45 tling-post at Laughton's within the 45 minutes allowed. I base this certainty on the time we receive from the division clock at Truckee. This is all we have to go by coming from that way. I compared my watch with the clock there before leaving While the train is running the conductor and engineer are held responsible. If it is the double order system, both have to sign. On leaving Verdi we had close to 15 minutes to reach Laughton's. To reach there, we would have to run the rate of about 20 miles an hour. According to the rules of conductors of the road, we are supposed to make 18 or 20 miles an hour on such a piece of road as that between Verdi an Laughton's. The west-bound train has the right to the road. The distance from Verdi to Laughton's is a little over 5 miles. Tke time for number 10 to leave the switch would have been 10:50. If No. 10 reached there at 10:50 she would be required to stop. After west-bound trains are twentyfive minutes late, east bound trains have the right to the road. Variation in watches cannot be used in connec-tion with this twenty-five minutes. If you are at a whistling-post you have a right to use the five minutes for variation of watches, but not when running from station to station. At the going when we struck; any one could have stepped off just the same as off a street car, as we had begun to slow down at the whistling-post. I left the train just as the collision came. I hallooed at Jack to get off, but he said he would not get off but would stop her. He plugged her, that is, put her in back motion and pulled her wide open on sand. Did not look to see what time it was then, but after Stopped at Tahoe spur, Prosser Creek, Boca, Mystic and Essex, and at Verdi we set out two cars. We are supposed to run by schedule time. Before leaving Wadsworth on the 3d I compared my time with Wadsworth, and also compared it with that of the engine, and they were both together. I also compared with the clock when I left Truckee, and also compared with the engineer. My time was one and a half minutes faster than the clock, and I asked the operator if the clock was I asked the operator if the clock, and I asked the operator if the clock was right and he said it was, and I set my watch back one and a half minutes. I was with the engineer after moving my watch back. Before starting out on a run I always compare my watch with the clock. It is the understand. on a run I always compare my watch with the clock. August Lundstrom testified: I was fireman on No. 9 on the 4th of this month. I don't know what time we left Verdi. I think I looked at Verdi and thought we could get in one one. and thought we could get in on our time at Laughton's without using any of our variation. I know it was short time. Our train broke in two this side or east of the Verdi bridge. We came to a dead stop there. I don't know who did the coupling. I should think this took a minute or so; it was done very quickly. I don't think it took three minutes. It was about one and a half or two miles west of Laughton's where the train broke in two. I bewhere the train broke in two. I be-lieve there was some conversation be-tween the conductor and engineer about being able to make Laughton's after the train broke in two. I think they had plenty of time to make Laugh-ton's on the variation. I heard the engineer make a remark about flagging in; then they looked at their watches. I know that if we had not broke in two we had plenty of time to make it two we had plenty of time to make it without using any of the variation. It was my impression that we had to use some of the variation to make Laugh-ton's. I don't think a man ever railroaded that has not used the variation, especially when they break in two. It is customary to run slowly and sen a flagman out when running on the variation. When I saw that we were going to strike I told my engineer to going to strike I told my engineer to jump. He reversed the engine and gave her steam, but did not jump. He had his hand on the throttle and stood there. The conductor jumped before I did. Perkins said after the collision to Thatcher, "You are a minute slow," but Thatcher was out of his head and made no reply. I looked at the engine clock about three looked at the engine clock about three minutes after the collision, and it was 1:51. It must have been later than My train was using some of the varia-tion when we collided.

GLENDALE NOTES.

(Continued from page 2.) Isaac M. Cross states: I was head brakeman on train No. 9 on the 4th of April. I don't know what time No. 9 arrived at Verdi that day. I do No. 9 arrived at verdi that day. I do not know the time she was at any point between there and Laughton's. We broke in two just on top of the twenty-five mile hill. The train was coupled up by the rear brakeman. The rear brakeman was in the caboose when the train broke in two and came up forward with a pin and link in his when the train broke in two and came up forward with a pin and link in his hand. The train immediately backed up to get the cars of the rear portion of the train. Should judge that this took three or four minutes. It was about one and a half miles from the the top of the hill when we broke in two to Laughton's. After we coupled up we were running at good speed, probably at 18 or 20 miles per hour. We slowed down after getting to the whistling-post to 6 or 8 miles per hour. The first I saw of No. 10 was the engine coming around the curve. When the ditch at the old Eastman dam has been made, counsel retained and all necessary steps taken to establish the status of this canal. Should the principal of priority finally obtain on the river, the proprietors of this ditch will undoubtedly have an abundance of water in the future.

Charlie Derby of the Alta mine has has been rusticating at the Derby ranch for a few days.

Mrs. George Alt arrived home from California, where she has been sojourning for a month, in quest of rest and health. She comes back from the citrus belt with an increased regard for our bracing zephyrs and the multiwere running before we broke in two. The delay could not have been over five minutes. The custom among railroad men on this division is that very few of them use the variation when they can't make the meeting point. I have been a conductor on this division. I would use the variation to make a station if the opportunity offered itself, but we are not supposed to use it. I think that No. 9 was using some of the variation. I don't think there was any extra whistles given at the whistling-post; just the usual whistles. East bound trains would use the variation but there is no rule to that effect. I am reasonably familiar with the rules of the company regarding the running of the company regarding the running of trains. I think there is a rule that strictly prohibits the using of the variation. The custom to avoid an accident of an east bound train when they are unable to make a meeting point are unable to make a meeting point without using the variation is to flag. I would, if compelled to use the variation, run to Laughton's under similar circumstances, but think I would have out a flag. I would have used all of the five minutes variation to have got there had it been necessary. The variation is for the train men to stop and flag. If No. 9 had sent out a flag from the whistling-post the collision would not have occurred.

The Terrible Trials of Two Russian Administration Exiles.

Tale of Woe Well Calculated to Bring Tears to the Eyes of the Reader-How Noble Woman Lost Her Child-Misery That Is Indescribable.

The following pathetic passage is from one of Mr. Kepnan's articles in the Century: "Two of the most interesting politicals whom we met in Irkutsk were Mr. and Mrs. Iyan Cherniavski, who were banished to Siberia by administrative process in 1878. I became very well acquainted with them, and for Mrs. Cherniavski especially I came to feel the profoundest pity and regard. Few women, even in Russia, have had before the age of thirty-five so tragic and heart-breaking a life, and still fewer have maintained through hardships, sickness and bereavement such cheerfulness and courage. She was arrested in Odessa in the early part of 1878 at the age of about twenty-five, and after a long term of im-POR SALE.

In the prisonment was sent by administrative process to the province of Totolsk. In the city prison of Kiev, on her way to Siberia, she was detained for a few days, and while there was forced to be aimost an eye-witness of the assasination of her dearest friend. A young man of English descent named Beverly, whom she had known from childhood, had been arrested shortly before upon the charge of living on a false passport and carrying on a revolutionary propagands, and he was at that time in the Kiev prison. The night before Mrs. Cherniavski was to resume her journey to Siberia, Beverly, with a comrade named Izbitski, attempted to escape through a tunnel which they had succeeded in digging from their cell to a point outside the prison wall. The prison authorities, however, had in some way become aware of the existence of the tunnel, and had posted a squai of soldiers near the place where the fugitives must emerge from the ground. Late at night, when they made their appearance, they were received with a volley of musketry. Beverly was mortally wounded, and as he lay writhing on the ground he was dispatched by a soldier with several repeated bayonet thrusts. Izbitski, wounded and severely beaten, was taken back into prison. The next morning when Mrs. Cherniavski started with her party for Siberia she had to march past the bloody and disfigured body of her dearest friend, which was still lying where it had fallen, in plain sight of the prison windows.

"I can bear my own personal torment," she said to me with a sob as she finished the

"'I can bear my own personal torment,'
she said to me with a sob as she finished the story of this tragedy, 'but such things as that break my heart.'

"I need not recount the hardships and miseries that she, a cultivated and refined woman, endured on the road and in the roadside etapes between Kiev and the small town in the Siberian province of Tobolsk where she and her husband had been assigned a residence. They reached their destination at last; a child was there born to them, and they lived there in something like comfort until March, 1881, when Alex-ander III. came to the throne, and Mr. Cherniavski was required to take the oath of allegiance. He refused to do so, and they were sent further eastward to the town of Kras noyarsk. A second refusal to take the oath of allegiance resulted in their being sent to Irkutsk. By this time winter had set in, and they were traveling in an open taran-tas with a delicate baby thirteen months of tas with a delicate baby thirteen months of age. It was with the greatest difficulty that Mrs. Cherniavski could keep her baby warm, and at the last station before reaching Irkutsk she removed the heavy wrappings in which she had enveloped it and found it dead. With the shock of this discovery she became delirious, and wept, sang pathetic little nursery songs to her dead child, rocked it in her arms, and prayed and cursed God by turns. In the court-yard and cursed God by turns. In the court-yard of the Irkutsk forwarding prison, in a tem-perature of thirty degrees below zero, Mr. Cherniavski stood for half an hour waiting for the party to be formally received, with his wife raving in delirium beside him and his dead child in his arms. "Mrs. Cherniavski lay in the prison hos-pital at Irkutsk until she recovered her rea-son, and to some extent her strength, and then she and her husband were sent two thousand miles farther to the northeastward under guard of gendarmes, and colonized in a Yakut settlement known as the Bataruski coloos, situated in the 'tiaga' or primeval wilderness of Yakutsk, one hundred aixty-five miles from the nearest town. There, suffering almost every conceivable hardship and privation, they lived until 1884, when the Minister of the Interior allowed them to return to a more civilized part of Siberia.

"Mrs. Cherniavski when I made her ac quaintance was a pale, delicate, hollow-cheeked woman, whose health had been completely wrecked by years of imprison-ment, banishment and grief. She had had two children, and had lost them both in exile under circumstances that made the be reavement almost intolerable; for seven years she had been separated by a dis-tance of many thousand miles from all of her kindred; and the future seemed to $2.90.

Precoclous Children.

No physician doubts that precocious children, fifty cases for one, are much worse for the discipline they have undergone. The mind seems to have been strained, and the foundation for insanity fis laid. When the studies of mature years are stuffed into the head of a child, people do not reflect on the anatomical fact that the brain of a man; that the one is confirmed, and can bear exertions, and the other is growing, and requires repose; that to force the attention to abstract facts, to load the memory with chronological and instorical or scientific detail, in short, to expect a child's brain to bear with impunity the exertions of a man's, is as irrational as it would be to hazard the same sort of experiments on its muscles.

Said a woman the other day: "I would rather have a man's opinion about my gowns, any time, than a woman's. He does not know once out of a hundred times what the material is, or what it is worth. He does know, however, whether or not it is becoming. If the gown pleases a man he shows it in his looks, and perhaps says something pleasant about it. Whether he says any thing or not, if he likes it his look of approbation is more than satisfactory, while if the gown is not pretty or becoming he simply doesn't notice it. That is the way of a man; he never sees a thing that is not attractive, and is quick to appreciate one that is." Godey's Lady's Book and Daily Gazette ...... 7 50 active, and is quick to appreci

GOOD HOME REMEDIES.

Various Uses to Which Turpentine Can Be Put in the Household. Every household medicine closet should contain a bottle of spirits of turpentine, to be used not only as medicine, but for a variety of other purposes, writes Maria Parloa in the Housewife. Here are some of the uses to which it can be put: the uses to which it can be put:

Old furniture that has a dull, greasy look should be rubbed with turpentine and then polished with any good polish. The improvement in its appearance will well repay you for the trouble. White spots on furniture can be removed by wetting a piece of flannel with turpentine and then rubbing the spot hard. It may require several applications of turpentine and considerable patience and strength for the rubbing for some obstinate places, but the rubbing for some obstinate places, but the worst spot will yield in time. If the white spot was caused by the spilling of an alcoholic substance, it will be easy to efface it; but heat and some other agents make marks which are more difficult to ob-Grease on clothing can be removed by wet ting a piece of flannel with turpentine and rubbing vigorously. Perhaps it will require several applications of the spirits. Still, the reward will come in the end. Benzine, chloroform and ether all are good for this purpose, but turpentine, although it is likely to show an enlarged ring on a delicate fabric, does not change the colors, as alcohol and ether sometimes do, and is peralcohol and ether sometimes do, and is per-fectly safe for even inexperienced people to use. For coarse fabrics, like men's clothes, it will be found particularly valu-able. It will take out wheel grease and other kinds of spots quickly and without damaging the cloth.

For medicinal purposes turpentine may be employed in many ways. For pain in the stomach, bowels, kidneys or bladder, dip a large piece of fiannel in hot water, and after wringing it cannot be the storage of the stora large piece of fiannel in hot water, and after wringing it saturate it with turpentine. Lay this cloth on the seat of pain and cover with another piece of fiannel or a towel. If the patient be in great pain, at the end of twenty minutes or half an hour wring the fiannel from hot water and saturate it with turpentine. It is a rare thing that more than the accord amplication has to be made. than the second application has to be made. In severe cases it is better to apply the turentine with lard rather than hot water. Mix the turpentine in the proportion of a tablespoonful to an equal quantity of lard and spread on the flannel. This preparation can be kept on for hours without disturbing the patient, whereas that made with hot water will, as a rule, have to be removed in half an hour or less time. Where bloating of the bowels occurs from the accumulation of gas, ten drops of tur-pentine on a lump of sugar or a teaspoonful of granulated sugar, taken internally— three doses in twelve hours—will afford relief. In severe cases the dose is often as large as a teaspoonful; but this should be only by a physician's advice. In bloating of the bowels in dysentery, half a teaspoon-ful of turpentine in a dose of castor-oil will elieve the patient. 4/4/00 PATIENCE SORELY TRIED. The Thirsty Clergyman, the Spigot and the Barrel of Ale.

An amusing story is told by the New York Times of an up-town preacher, whose church is the center of one of the most important parishes in Harlem. It has been the doctor's habit for many years to take a light supper of some crackers, cheese and a glass of new ale before retiring and he was a flywar provident enough to ing, and he was always provident enough to keep a half-barrel of the beverage in his cellar. His wife informed him one afternoon that an aunt of hers, who enjoyed ale even more than the clergyman did, was on her way to the city and would arrive at on her way to the city and would arrive at the parsonage the following afternoon. "Then, my dear," observed the good man, "we must get some fresh ale."

The barrel arrived the same afternoon and was carefully stored away in the cellar until the morrow, when the doctor intended to put a spigot in it and have it all ready for the expected sunt. Upon looking over his diary in the morning the clergyman saw that he had a wedding to attend at 10:30 o'clock, so he dressed himself faultlessly, o'clock, so he dressed himself faultlessly, and was about going out, when his wife suggested that he had best fix the ala. Snatching up a mallet and a wooden spigot the doctor shot down-stairs and his wife went leisurely to the upper part of the house. Ten minutes elapsed and then fifteen, when the clergyman's wife began to wonder if her husband had gone without bidding her actieu. She looked at the hat-rack down-stairs and there were his hat and overcoat. Descending, the anxious wife arrived at the foot of the cellar stairs, where a scene baffling adequate description confronted her. The dignified clergyman was seated on the ground with one hand closed tightly about the end of a broken spigot and the other wringing the new ale out of his whiskers. It was pretty cool in the cellar and the drenched minister was shivering. Looking at his wife appealingly, he said:

"F-For Heaven's sake, Martha, g-g-get me a b-bung."
Almost over Almost overcome by her laughter, his wife found a bung and handed it to her unfortunate husband. He grasped it as a disheartened swimmer is said to grab at a disneartened swimmer is said to grab at a solitary straw, and placing it over the broken spigot, gave it a rap with the mallet, intending to drive both into the hole and thus stop the leak. But he struck too hard. The spigot went clear in, and so did the bung, but the latter in its passage split the staves, and, with the rush of a small cloud-burst, the ale flew all over the clearymen. burst, the ale flew all over the clergyman and wetted him to the skin. An escape was made from the cellar. When a dry part of the house was reached the clergyman turned to his wife and remarked:

"Martha, darn that ale!"

A WIDE-AWAKE WIDOW.

A WIDE-AWAKE WIDOW.

How She Cheated the Lawyers Out of Her Husband's Estate.

A man of considerable wealth, who died some time since, made a distribution of his personal estate, which did not suit his disconsolate widow. Among other unsatisfactory things, says the New Yerk Ledger, he bequeathed the proceeds of certain land and stocks of value to a brother, while he left to the widow the proceeds of other stocks, and lands comparatively valueless, as a portion of her legacy. But the widow was sole executrix of the will; and when she came to sell, she disposed of the land and stocks in a lump, setting a high valuation on those of which she was to have the proceeds, and a low valuation on the others, the valuation of the two lots taken together making a fair price for the whole. By this means she exactly reversed that portion of her husband's will relating to the land and stocks in question.

The brother, not relishing such sharp practice on the part of his sister-in-law, brought a suit to recover the actual value of the bequest made to him; whereupon the widow proposed that instead of spending the estate in law, they should marry each other and enjoy it together. This proposition "struck a responsive chord" in the breast of the brother. They were married accordingly, and are said to be having a jolly time in spending the fortune which the deceased gentleman was so kind as to accumulate for them.

The Carson Appeal says: The crowd of old "after-twelve o'clocks" which assembled to hear the liquor question discussed was about the hardest ever seen in the Supreme Courtroom. Jake Klein looked over to Livingston and remarked:

"Al, py shimminie! look at disgang; I pelief it peats der pill."

Mr. C. J. Smith, traveling sales-may for Belford, Clark & Co., Chicago, had the misfortune to sprain his wrist most severely. "I was suffering great pain," he says, and my wrist was badly swollen; a few applications of Chamberlain's Pain Balm relieved the rain and reduced the swelling in one night, and in consequence my work and business was not interrupted, for which I am very grateful I can recommend Chamberlain's Pain Balm from personal experience." Sold by Osbuin & Shoemaker.

A Reward Offered. The Genoa Currier says: The Commissioners of Donglas county have offered a reward of $250 for the arrest and conviction of the murderer or murderers of Balma Celas, recently killed in the Pine Nut mountains.

Rich food and lack of exercise, during the winter months, causes the system to become torpid and the blood impure. A dose or two of St. Patrick's Pills will cleanse and invigorate the system, purify the blood and do more good than a dollar bottle of blood puri-fier. Sold by Osburn & Shoemaker.

The story of the fight with the Diablo Canyon robbers and the killing of two men is now denied.

A person is seldom sick when their bowels are regular and never well when they are irregular. Bear this in mind and keep your bowels regular by an occasional dose of St. Patrick's Pills. Sold by Osburn & Shoemaker.
